Barcelona Games Hurdle The Barriers of Bias Solidarity Prevails at Olympics

By William Drozdiak

BARCELONA — After four decades of East-West competition, the 1992 Olympics, which closed Sunday, will go down in history as the Games that not only epitomized the death of the Cold War on the athletic field but brought down other racial and ideologi-

For the first time in memory, political hostilities did not keep athletes from getting to the Games. A record number of nations attended - 171 - and instead of boycotts. the big problem was how to accommodate the flock of newly independent states that arose from the remnants of the Soviet Union and Koreans from North and South shook hands, competed for medals and dreamed about one day sending a joint team. Israelis and Arabs traded pins. Bosnian Muslims and Yugoslav Serbs dined together but avoided discussing their ugly war. Chinese and Tai-wanese speculated about Beijing's chances of playing host to the Olympics in the year 2000.

South Africa rejoiced in ending a 32-year Olympic ban and dispatched a mixed-race team that could provide inspiration for an integrated society in the future. Blacks applauded the white tennis duo of Wayne Ferreira and Piet Norval for winning the country's first medal, while whites rooted for Angola's basketball squad in its hopeless struggle against the American "Dream Team" and cheered on Kenya's breathtaking runners in the middle-distance races.

"There is now a true feeling of African solidarity," said Dan Moyo, deputy chief of South Africa's Olympic delegation. "Every-body knows it's not the same old racist re-

For Germany, the tensions caused by the strain of unification have showed up on the country's first united Olympic team in 28 years. Dagmar Hase broke down in tears and frustration after her upset victory over the U.S. swimmer Janet Evans in the women's 400-meter freestyle; she chastized her coaches for favoring athletes from the West and harassing those from the East about possible

The German claimed that her friend Astrid Strauss, a silver medalist swimmer at the 1988 Seoul Games, was "treated like an animal" in Munich, where she was boosed in the national championships because of her history of having tested positive for steroids.

"We had a positive feeling at our training camp before the Games, but this was a big setback to efforts to get East and West to-gether," said Manfred Thiesmann, the chief

Besides the suspicions about use of performance-enhancing drugs, Mr. Thiesmann said Eastern athletes were still experiencing difficusties in coping with life away from the state-backed system that nurtured their skills and catered to every need.

"You can't have democracy on the one hand," he said, "and still want to keep intact the old state-run sports system that hands out special privileges to the top athletes."

U.S. Support For UN Force Is Linked to Aid Flights

Caution Marks Stands As Agreement on Balkan Resolution Seems Near

By Paul F. Horvitz

WASHINGTON -As agreement neared on a United Nations resolution authorizing force in the Balkans, a top American official signaled Sunday that the measure would not be invoked as long as UN relief flights at the Sarajevo airport continued unimpeded.

This and other notes of caution were repeatedly struck on a day when American and British officials expressed optimism that the UN Security Council would, by midweek, vote to permit the use of "all necessary means" to assist UN relief efforts in Bosnia.

The thrust of the remarks Sunday by Lawrence S. Eagleburger, the acting secretary of state, and Brent Scowcroft, the national security adviser to President George Bush, suggested that approval of a UN resolution did not portend a major expansion of the UN peacekeep-ing role in Bosnia unless the relief effort there deteriorated

The Balkan aid resolution seemed to be taking shape with considerably more stress on the role of existing UN personnel and less on the forces of an allied coalition

"The president, in talking about all necessary means, including the use of force, is talking exclusively about using that to provide humani-tarian assistance," said Mr. Eagleburger, the acting secretary while James A. Baker 3d is on vacation. He described the delivery zone as "Sarajevo and the area around," and he made it clear that no effort would be made to "end the

Later, he added: "Right now, with the airport in Sarajevo open again and the supplies going in, it's probably not necessary." Mr. Scowcroft called the Balkan conflict

Israel Leadership Acts to Alter 'Stupid Law' Against Talks With PLO

By David Hoffman non Post Service

JERUSALEM — The new government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin will ask the Israeli parliament to revise a 1986 law outlawing meetings with the Palestine Liberation Organization, a senior government official announced Sunday.

Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beillin said,

"We have a deep obligation to change this But he told Israeli radio that the changes, if

to negotiate with the PLO, which Israel has long considered a terrorist organization.

The government of Israel may decide to talk to the PLO or not," Mr. Beillin said, "I don't believe that we need now to talk to the PLO since we have a new formula from the Madrid conference under which we are meeting people of the West Bank and Gaza, who are of course quite close to, affiliated with the PLO and do not represent formally the PLO."

"I believe this formula is easier for us, and I change the law, and in the first few weeks, his government has all but ceased enforcing it. Several Israeli Arab leaders and Palestinians from the territories have said they met with PLO officials and were not charged,

This was in marked contrast to the former Likud government headed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, which summoned Palestinian leaders for questioning after their highly publicized meeting with the PLO leader, Yasser don't think we have to change it," he added.

Mr. Rabin had promised in his campaign to election. However, Mr. Shamir was defeated and the Palestinians were not prosecuted. In his inaugural address, Mr. Rabin invited the leaders of neighboring Arab states — but not Mr. Arafat — to come to Jerusalem. Mr.

Arafat told the Israeli daily Ha'aretz he would like to come to meet with Mr. Rabin. Mr. Beillin said the Rabin government would seek to revise the law, apparently when parlia-ment reconvenes in October. "Breaking the law should mean only when you are meeting Palestinians with the intention to harm the interest of Israel," he said. This would be similar to the provisions covering meetings with people from Arab countries who are intending to harm the state. The law carries a penalty of up to three years in prison.

Last year, an Israeli court sentenced a peace activist. Abe Nathan, to an 18-month prison sentance for violating the law. Mr. Nathan served four months in prison after his first

Taipei May Get Pick of U.S. or French Fighters

By Laurence Zuckerman

International Herald Tribune TAIPEI - After more than a decade when Taiwan could find no country willing to sell it advanced jet fighters, it may now be in the position of having to choose between two foreign suppliers.

For years no government, not even its ally the United States, had been willing to sell advanced warplanes to Taipei, fearing that a sale would offend Beijing. But in an election-year turn-around, President George Bush has said he may approve a sale of F-16s, and France says it is idering the sale of Mirage jets to Taipei.

Last month, on his way to an appearance in Texas. Mr. Bush told an interviewer that he would reconsider Washington's longtime policy barring the sale of F-16s to Taiwan. The announcement came only one day after General Dynamics Corp., manufacturer of the F-16, said it would lay off nearly 6,000 workers in Texas because of falling demand for the fighter.
Texas, along with its electoral votes, is a key part of Mr. Bush's re-election strategy. Members of the state's congressional delegation from both parties have begun a campaign to persuade the White House to approve the sale, which they say would save 3,000 jobs. Even before Mr. Bush's announcement, however, President François Mitterrand of France had been considering whether to allow Das-sault Aviation to sell as many as 100 Mirage 2000-5 advanced fighters to Taiwan in a bid to shore up the struggling French company. For Taiwan, Mr. Bush's reversal may mean having to choose between the F-16, a plane it

years, and a growing military and economic relationship with France. "The F-16 is a very symbolic airplane for Taiwan," said a U.S. analyst who requested anonymity. "It's the one thing they have consistently asked for and the one thing the U.S. has

has been trying to obtain for more than a dozen stently said no to." A Taiwan official put it even more bluntly: "No matter what you hear about the Mirage," he said, "our interest in the F-16 is firm." Such declarations confirm French suspicions that Taiwan has been using the prospect of the Mirage sale to pry the F-16 out of Washington.

Coastal Pilot Grounded the QE2, Liner's Owner Says

BOSTON — As the Queen Elizabeth 2 limped toward dry dock Sunday for repair of six gashes in its hull, the ship's owner said a U.S. coastal pilot was in control of the luxury liner when it ran aground off Massachusetts. All of the 1,800 passengers were safely evacu-

Scotia cruise when the accident occurred. None of the passengers or 1,000 crew members was The gashes, the largest 74 feet (22 meters) long occurred when the ship struck bottom shortly before 10 P.M. on Friday, Coast Guard officials said. The grounding ruptured several ballast compartments and a fuel tank aboard the 963-foot ship. But officials said the liner was in no danger of sinking, and was evacuated as a precaution and to allow it to head to a Boston shipyard for repairs.

"She's taking about an inch of water an hour, but the pumps are well able to keep up with that," a Coast Guard spokesman said. The liner, which was cruising under its own power accompanied by a Coast Guard cutter and two tugboets, was expected in Boston early

An investigation by the National Transportation Safety Board could take six months, according to a spokesman, Brent Bahler. There was no immediate estimate of the cost of the The Oneen Elizabeth 2, operated by Cunard

Lines, ran aground near Buzzard's Bay after leaving the island of Martha's Vineyard near Cape Cod. The site, outside a shipping channel on a route the liner takes only twice a year, was eight miles (13 kilometers) west of Martha's Vineyard in an area of treacherous sand bars

The area is not far from where the Italian liner Andrea Doria sank with a loss of 43 lives in 1956 after being rammed by a Swedish liner. A spokesman for Cunard, Ron Santangelo, turned control of it over to a coastal pilot, John F. Hadley of Newport, Rhode Island, who steered it onto the shelf.

Dick Phanenf, office manager with North-east Pilots, the company employing the pilot, said he could not immediately comment. Constal pilots are often hired to guide large vessels through tight spots, and the Queen Fireabeth 2 was traveling past a series of small islands dotting the shallow waters off Buzzards

Bay when it ran aground. Lieutenant James Donovan of the U.S. Coast Guard said the captain, several other officers and the pilot had undergone drug and alcohol tests after the accident. It was not known when the results would be available.

The passengers were evacuated late Saturday to Newport, Rhode Island, from where they boarded trains to New York. The evacuation, which involved four ferries and six of the liner's lifeboats, took four and a half hours. Repairs were expected to keep the ship out of commission for at least 10 days. The damage forced cancellation of a cruise to England. When the accident occurred, many of the ship's passengers were seated for support they felt the ship quake with vibrations.

"We suddenly experienced a tremendous vibration," said Nat Welch, of Lincoln, Massachusette "The pibele ship stanted to she have chusetts. "The whole ship started to shake quite violently. I went to take a look outside and overheard someone going into a radio room saying it appeared we hit a sand bar."

An hour later, the ship, with propellers spinning in reverse, was refloated by its crew. But water was leaking into several compartments, and the ship's officers smelled fuel-oil leaking from a ruptured tank

The Coast Guard was notified, emergency vessels were dispatched to the scane and divers were flown in from New York to make a damage inspection of the 65,000-ton vessel. They found that about a third of the hull was damaged below the waterline, the Coast Guard

The Senate voted last week to restore funding for the $8.25 billion superconducting supercollider in Texas -a project that some say will keep the United States at the cutting edge of science and others criticize as profligate in recessionary times. The collider, which will smash protons into each other at close to the speed of light, will be used to study basic nuclear interactions at the very start of the universe. Next year, member countries of the European Center for Nuclear Research in Geneva, known os CERN, will decide whether to build a similar instrument called a Large Hadron Collider, a more powerful successor to its existing Large Electron Positron Collider, or LEP. John Ellis, head of the theory division at CERN, discussed the pros and cons of such projects with Barry James of the International Her-

Q. Particle physics is expensive and obscure. Do you find hostility because of this?

A. The greatest hostility comes from colleagues in other disciplines whose own research programs are becoming ever more expensive and who would like to have a bigger slice of the cake. The public respects what we do. They may not understand it fully, but they find it fascinating. The sales of books like Stephen Hawkings' indicates that. People realize that any society must devote resources to mental questions. Q. Does this research have a practical

A. Our justification must be that we are producing knowledge which is part of the basic intellectual capital of the human race. History shows, however, that fundamental knowledge a generation or two down the road becomes applied to many practical problems.

Q. After two years of operation, are you happy with the results of the Large Electron Positron Collider.

A. Very happy. It started up very quickly and has produced a lot of interesting results.

It enabled us to count the number of different types of neutrinos, which is important for cosmology. LEP has also provided new, precise measurements of the coupling strength of interactions among particles. If we extrapolate the measurements upward, using a theory called super symmetry, they agree nigh perfectly as they should do in what is known as the Grand Unified Theory. Super symmetry is a prime candidate for explaining the dark matter of the universe.

O. Which is? A. Astrophysicts and cosmologists believe that over 90 percent of the matter in the universe is hidden and may be of a different nature from the matter that we

Q. If this were proved, would it turn physics on its head? A. I think it certainly would. There is a race on at the moment between us particle physicists with our accelerators and the astrophysicists to find dark matter.

Q. Why do you draw a link between particle physics and cosmology?

A. If you want to understand what happened in the universe when it was very young you need to tackle that with particle physics. We believe that the structures we see in the universe have evolved from fluctuations, perturbations that were laid down very early in time. Q. LEP reproduces those conditions? A. Yes, something like when the universe was one tenth of a billionth of a

Q. And the projected Large Hadron

A. That would take us back to when the universe had one hundredth the age LEP can reach. Q. One of the reasons for huilding the electron positron collider was to test the so-called standard model of the universe. Is that model holding up?

A. It holds up very well. In the standard model you can calculate everything with arbitrary precision. What LEP shows is that those calculations are right to better than I percent. We are also able to predict the mass of particles which are expected in the standard model but oot

O. Is there a connection between physics and philosopby today?

A. Great revolutions in physics have arisen in two different ways. One is where someone comes with a philosophical approach to attack the things which are really fundamental and makes a tremendous breakthrough. A specific example here is Einstein. His formulation of both special and general relativity were oot driven by experimental observations, but by profound philosophical insights.

The other great revolution of early 20th century physics was quantum mechanics, which arose in a very empirical manner. People developed theories in response to what the data were telling them. There were then philosophical implications of those theories in that people had to abandon the principle of predictability which had underlain classical Newtonian physics. Relativity, I think, also has something to do with the fact that a lot of the old philosophical certainties no longer seem so certain.

Q. Talking about certainties, how sure are you that the Large Hadron Collider will be huilt?

A. It's clearly going to be a political decision. But last December, the member states of CERN agreed unanimously that the LHC is the natural oext project for

UN Force, Once Cheered, Is Now a Target of Sarajevo Anger

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — By proposing that the United Nations authorize the use of force to keep relief supplies flowing into Bosma, President George Bush is putting new demands on the UN military command here at a time when its relations with the Bosnian government are strained to the breaking point.

Alija Izetbegovic, the Bosnian president, said his people appreciated the airlift of food and medicine. which resumed ou Saturday after a 72-hour suspen-sion. But he expressed reservations about the UN approach to the struggle in Bosnia.

"We are very grateful for the relief supplies, and I wouldn't want anybody to think that we do not appreciate the risk the United Nations has taken to deliver them," be said. "But the larger question for us is whether the United Nations really understands what is happening here."

Any efforts to strengthen the UN presence, includ-ing the possible use of American and other troops to protect overland relief convoys, will have to be carried out in the face of widespread antagonism toward the UN command, manifested in a feeling among Saraje-vans that the peacekeepers here have been callous at best toward the sufferings of the city and at worst partial to the Serbian forces attacking it.

Matters have reached the point where Mr. Izetbegovic described the UN commander who completed his tour of duty here last week as "an ignorant man." Some of the hostility for the commander, Major General Lewis W. MacKenzie, a Canadian, may have hastened his replacement.

In an interview, Mr. Izetbegovic cited remarks by > Whether matters will improve under the permanent replacement, Brigadier General Hussein Ali Abdul Razek of Egypt, who is scheduled to arrive here later this month, remains to be seen. But the attacks on the UN troops are only a symptom of a deeper problem.

III feelings have also grown out of Sarajevans' sense that UN officers and officials, riding in armored vehicles, have seen little of the destruction and have rarely ventured to places where the suffering can be felt, like hospitals

Often, UN officials speak of the war as a confrontstion between Serbs and Muslims, whereas the government insists that it is fighting for a society in which Muslims, Serbs and Croats can live in harmony.

The assertion that the UN command is pro-Serbian has been vigorously rejected by UN officials. They say that they are under constraint not to express personal the streets, the United Nations has become a target for feelings about the siege because the cooperation of hostility, not only from the government but also from Serbian nationalists is needed for nearly everything many ordinary residents. Cypriot authorities acted on a tip from the German intelligence service and the freighter, German Senator, is now returning to Bombay, the spokesman said. The reason given for the return: The shippers had not obtained an export license, which is required for German shippers even when carrying cargo from elsewhere.

Philippine Volcano Stirring Again

MANILA (AP) - Mount Pinatubo may crupt within a week with fury comparable to the blast last year that killed 700 people and drove hundreds of thousands from their homes, scientists said Sunday.

The Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology said a series of volcanic earthquakes and a drop in sulfur dioxide gas emissions signaled an approaching amption, perhaps several. The volcano, 90 kilometets (60 miles) northwest of Maulia, calmed in September 1991 but began covary

Scientists said the pattern of activity was similar to that recorded before the June 1991 eruption, one of the most violent worldwide this century. The volcano institute urged local residents to stay out of the designated danger zone, which extends 10 kilometers from the volcano.

Heavy Spending on Congress Campaign Trail

WASHINGTON - Congressional campaign spending has shot up this year, but political action committees are providing a smaller share of the cash, according to a Federal Election Commission

Spending through June 30 in all House and Senate races reached $288 million, up 50 percent from $192 million two years ago.

The increase appeared to be caused largely by two hotly contested Senate races in California, which had none in 1990, and by an increase in House candidates seeking to take advantage of reapportionment, There are 2,247 people in races for the 435 House seats this year, as against 1,372 in 1990.

* ELECTION NOTES * '92 Role Reversal: Republicans Falter As Foes Get Tough

By Robin Toner

New York Times Service LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas -Slowly but surely, a thought that defies years of conventional wisdom and real-life experience is tak-ing hold in political circles: Is it possible that in 1992, it is the Democrats who are running the tougher, shrewder, closer-to-the-bone presidential campaign?

It is a notion that is hard even for some Democrats to accept, even in Governor Bill Clinton's tightly wound headquarters in Little

Over the past few weeks, Clinton strategists have watched with a trace of disbelief as their Republican counterparts have stambled, stepped on their message, accused the other side of negative campaigning, attacked and apologized and attacked once more.

"I live under the assumption that the Republicans, on a presidential level, are highly skilled," said a somewhat puzzled Stan Greenberg, the Clinton campaign's poll taker.
"In the past, they've run circles around us."

James Carville, a top strategist for the Clinton campaign, permitted himself a small smile. They've had their way in presidential races for so long, they're kind of like the school yard bully," he asserted. "Now that we're hitting back, they're acting like it's not fair."

Democrats, of course, have had good summers before, only to die slowly between the Labor Day holiday in early September and Election Day in November. Still, these have been three tough weeks for the Republicans, promising a far more competitive autumn than they have grown accustomed to.

Republican presidential strategists had developed fearsome reputations in the 1980s as guerrilla fighters who learned their skills toppling a Democratic establishment and stayed bungry long after they came to power.

Lee Atwater, who managed George Bush's presidential cam-paign in 1988 and died of a brain tumor last year at the age of 40, was emblematic of the breed. They had a sure sense of the rhythm of a modern presidential campaign, a fix on the national mood and the willingness to do what was necessary to win.

Now, many Republicans fear its edge. Worse still, they fear that so difficult to handle in 1988.

the crew down in Little Rock has found one.

Representative Newt Gingrich of Georgia, the House Republican whip, maintains that Mr. Clinton will inevitably be unmasked as a frightening tax-and-spend liberal, but he still voices a grudging admiration for what the Clinton cam-paign has accomplished so far. Calling them "terrific tacti-cians," Mr. Gingrich said, "I think they'll dance their way as close to the presidency as anyone could with that product."

Some Republican observers assert that the Democrats are conducting a far more negative campaign than their opponents this year, all the while screaming about Republican negativism.

It is hard to overestimate the effect of the 1988 campaign of Michael S. Dukakis on the psyche of Democratic political professionals, who saw what seemed to be a winnable race slip away under a Re-publican onslaught.

Mr. Dukakis, the Democratic presidential nominee, clearly be-lieved his 17 percentage point lead in mid-July, believed that the pub-lic wanted a campaign on the issues and believed that the voters would not accept what the Republicans were saying about him. He was, of course, wrong, especially on the third point, and his failure to respond to Republican attacks has taken its place as one of the great mistakes of modern campaigning.

This year, the Democrats have not only learned to hit back, as Mr. Carville suggests, but they have also learned to love it. They revel in their reputation as "tough Democrats," scanning the news-service wires and the satellite television feeds for attacks on their candidates, priding themselves on the speed of their responses - all the while firing off their own first

They operate out of a "war room," under the manic direction of the Louisiana-born Mr. Carville, who decrees that aides shall run, not walk, to the fax machine with the Clinton line of the day.

The Clinton organization also re-flects the accumulated experience of dozens of Senate and gubernatorial races, many of them in the South, which gives this team considerable practice in rebutting the Now, many Republicans fear conservative attacks on "values" that their presidential team has lost that the Dukakis campaign found for the bashing of Bill Chuton.

Frustrated, Bush Team Prepares To Hit Back

With Republicans preparing to open their platform hearings in Houston on Monday and their national convention the following week, the media spotlight is about to shift to President George Bush and his party. But it is likely the Republicans will be talking as much about the Democratic nomince as about themselves. Mr. Bush, whose approval ratings plunged last week to 33 per-cent in a Washington Post-ABC News Poll, the lowest of his presidency, signaled the coming har-rage, saying the public could expect to see some hard-hitting attacks which are going to fairly define his

The Republicans are frustrated at what they see as Mr. Clinton's ability to set the terms of the campaign debate - change versus status quo — and want to shift it to a discussion of just what Mr. Clinton and his running mate, Senator Al Gore of Tennessee, propose to do if

"We have to force the debate down from the vague level at which Clinton and Gore have kept it and get people to focus on the competing agendas," said William Kristol, Vice President Dan Quayle's chief of staff. The Republicans' frustration derives largely from the polling data that show Mr. Clinton still leading Mr. Bush by 20 to 25 percentage points. At this point four years ago, Mr. Bush had begun to whittle away at the 17-point lead enjoyed by Michael S. Dukakis, the Massathe Republican convention coded, chusetts governor, and by the time the race was a dead heat. But Mr. Clinton has kept the Republicans off balance with an aggressive, quick-hitting campaign.

When Mr. Bush attacked Mr. Clinton last week on his economic plan, the Clinton campaign responded with a flurry of faxes that rebutted Mr. Bush point-by-point, threw in an irresistible statistic suggesting that Arkansas had created more private-sector jobs during the Bush years than the rest of the country combined, and then offered reporters a list of economists to call for further support.

Doctor's House Call Making a Comeback

The house call, once falling into disuse, is again becoming a mainstay of medical practice, The New York Times reports, as insurance companies seek ways to cut down on expensive hospital stays. Medicare also is paying doctors more to visit patients at home, $49 compared with $29 last year. Medicare is a joint federal-state program that provides health insurance for the elderly and disabled. As recently as the 1950s. nearly every doctor made house calls, but this declined steadily because doctors did oot consider them cost-efficient. Today, only 50 percent make house calls, according to a study by the American Medical Association, but the number has stabilized and appears to be on its way back up. In many ways it is a new kind of house call, made possible by miniaturized, portable equipment like electrocardiogram machines.

Proponents say house calls are good for doctors as well as patients. "When you walk into the house, you're on the pa-tient's turf," said Dr. Larry Bernstein, author of "Primary Care in the Home," a medical textbook. "In the hospital, I'm king. I tell the ourses what to do. I sit where I want. When I'm in someone's bome, I ask: Where can I wash my hands? Is it O.K. to sit here?

Short Takes

Now that manufacturers are making cars more pollution-free every year, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is closing in on another substantial source of smog: gasoline-powered machinery like tractors, lawn mowers, leaf blowers, chain saws and outboard motors. Until now, burning less fuel more cleanly has not been a consideration in most off-road machines because they use relatively little: few customers care whether a chain saw gets six trees to the gallon or seven.

Tokyo Cringes as a Japanese Says He Seized Korean Women

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

ABIKO CITY. Japan - From his modest house in this distant Tokyo suburb, Seiji Yoshida, now 78 and bent by age, has become something of a nightmare for the Japanese government: a self-described former war criminal eager to confess in front of the television

Again and again in recent months, Mr. Yoshida has told the story of how he led a group of wartime policemen into rural corners of Korea, surrounded entire villages and seized women between the ages of 18 and 35.

Often, he said, be grabbed screaming infants from the women's arms before forcing the women into trucks and shipping them to the front lines in China to serve in brothels for Japan's invasion force. Thousands of the women never returned, some killed by Japanese soldiers and many others caught in the crossfire of battle. "The screaming was terrible, but that was my routine throughout 1943 and 1944," Mr. Yoshida said recently, estimating that he had seized perhaps 2,000 women. "It was just like kidnapping. It may be the worst abuse of human rights in Asia in this century." For months the government of Prime Minister Kiiaround a diplomatic minefield as elderly Korean women step forward after years of silence to demand reparations for their pain. Apart from their accounts, Mr. Yoshida's memories are the most potent bit of testimony yet that Japan not only ran the brothels but also organized kidnapping squads to keep the sites supplied with tens of thousands of "inaufu," or "comfort women.

Mr. Yoshida's story has come under intense attack from historians who describe it as the fictional musings of an old man seeking headlines. No other veterans have told similar stories, they point out, and there is no documentary evidence to back him op.

But the issue of his war experiences, like every argument here over the extent of Japan's war crimes, iggests that more is at stake than the facts.

It is one of the constant small skirmishes between those who say Japan has yet to come to terms with the war, and those who view disputes like this one as part of a campaign to humiliste Japan into a never-ending series of apologies.

Rarely has the struggle become as intense as this year, when every few weeks brings a fresh 50th anniversary of some event in the war.

"Japan is silent about this, but Japanese are angry," said Professor Ikuhiko Hata, one of Mr. Yoshida's chi Miyazawa has been scrambling to find a way leading critics. "The apologies are endless."

Confronted with overwhelming evidence gathered by a Japanese history professor who said he was tired of official obfuscation, the government grudgingly admitted in July that the military had recruited the women and run the brothels. Until recently, many officials clung to the explanation that the brothel system was set up by private

Still, the government insisted that there was no evidence the women were forced into the work. Instead, it suggested that the 100,000 to 200,000 women were volunteers, or young women sold to "brokers" by their families, or innocents who had been duped into believing they were going to work at factories. The government has rejected proposals for public hearings on the issue, saying it would violate the privacy of the women. Others suggest the government has a different motive: If the women could prove that the government had a team of kidnappers at work, it might strengthen claims for compensation.

The South Korean government says it has collected the names of 155 people who say they deserve com-pensation. Of that number, 74 are women who say they were forced to work in brothels; the remainder are their survivors. Mr. Miyazawa, apparently eager to see the issue brought to rest, has said that Japan must find a way to "express our feelings of remorse" and has himed that some form of compensation might be on the way.

Stories like Mr. Yoshida's keep the issue on the front pages. Starting with a book he wrote in 1983 iong before the issue became a major political dispine.
Mr. Yoshida said that he had been hired in Yamagach. prefecture to direct a group of Korean policemen in recruiting" the women. At the time, Korea was a Japanese colony.

"We would use 5 or 10 trucks, and sweep the villages, choosing two or three young women from each who would be suitable," he says. He describes many instances in detail, including a sweep through a factory on Cheju Island, off the southern coast of Korea, where many women were seized at a botton

But Mr. Yoshida's story has some problems. He confesses to having changed some details of events his presented as "facts" to avoid bringing shame on thes he worked with and their families. Seiji is a pen name he says be used to protect his own family.

Professor Hata and others dismiss the accounts as pure fabrication. "In Korea it was all through official arrangements or it was voluntary," he said. He teaches at Takushoku University, which once trained tivi servants to administer Japan's colonies.

Analysts say that local concerns about financing the six-year plan, despite Taiwan's $83.2 billion in foreign exchange reserves, have made the French offer attractive. In addition, Taipei, which has been isolated diplomatically since most of the world switched recognition to Beijing 20 years ago, is eager to forge closer relations with a major opean partner.

General and 8 Aides Die in Sri Lanka Blast

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatch

COLOMBO — The general leading the war against Tamil separatists has been killed, along with eight of his top aides, in a land mine explosion, dealing the Sri Lankan government a severe blow in its nine-year fight against the rebels.

A London-based spokesman for a rebel group, the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, claimed responsibility for the explosion, which destroyed the vehicle the officers were riding in Saturday. Ten people, including the driver, were killed. But it was not clear whether the mine had been intended to kill the officers, or was left over from an earlier campaign.

The explosion occurred on Kayts Island, which government forces retook from the rebels in November. The island is a few miles from the Jaffna Peninsula, the center of the Tamil insurgency. The Liberation Tigers and other groups are fighting for a homeland for the Tamils, who make up about 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 17 million

The mine exploded under the officers' vehicle as they were driving to a helicopter to fly back to the Jaffna Peninsula after a tour of the island. Those killed included Major General Denzil Kobbekaduwa, commander of the anti-separatist war, Brigadier General Vijaya Wirnalaratne, the government commander in oorthern Sri Lanka; and three navy officers.

From Bosnia Hit A Nerve in Israel

New York Times Service JERUSALEM - Reports of atrocities in Serbian-run detention centers have struck a sensitive nerve in Israel, evoking memories of Nazi concentration camps and leading many people to say that their country has a special moral obligation to send help.

Last week, the Israeli legislature met to discuss the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres amounced that Israel would supply food and medical assistance.

It was an occasionally impassioned debate, one that continued in public print and on the air waves, with some political figures and scholars suggesting that Israel should send air force planes to bomb Serbian targets in defense of Bosnia-Herzegovina, where most of the victims are Muslims.

But there were no plans, government officials said, to send anything more than an unspecified amount of humanitarian aid. The reports of murder and suffering of those detained in Bosnia can only cause everyone in the world, and especially Jews, to feel revulsion to the depths of their souls." Mr. Peres said.

Heavy Arms Outlays Said to Strain Iran

that letters of credit no longer be opened for Iranian businesses. The Iranian effort has been largely eclipsed by other events, including the confrontation between the West and Iraq, and lately, the Yngoslay crisis.

But Saudi and French intelligence officials have signaled in the last few months that Teb-ran's campaign to rebuild its armed forces, which began in 1988 after the end of the eightyear war with Iraq, have been greatly aided by rising oil income and driven by determination to achieve superiority in the Gulf region. "The idea is to regain their hegemony as the regional military power in the Gulf, and they are getting there," a Saudi intelligence official said, adding that the effort "stands in the way of good relations with the Arab countries of the Gulf."

In November, the Pentagon said Iran's plans included the purchase of conventional weapons as well as an effort to acquire nuclear technology, an assertion that Tehran vehemently de-

But Saudi and French officials say they are sure Iran is working on plans to build atomic weapons as well as increasing its conventional arsenal, despute an assertion by the International Atomic Energy Agency, a UN organization based in Vienna, that an inspection team found "nothing suspicious" on a February inspection

Western officials have yet to find credible evidence of an Iranian attempt to acquire nu-clear weapons, but there is little doubt that the purchase of conventional weapons is soaring. Arab and French intelligence officials have gathered evidence — backed by independent groups like the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London - indicating that the Iranian Air Force, nearly wiped out at the end of the war with Iraq, is now much stronger for both offensive and defensive operations.

The Saudi and French officials said Iran spent or committed $3.2 billion on arms in 1988 and 1989, primarily to Moscow for MiG aircraft and tanks. In 1990 and 1991, they say, Iran spent or pledged $4 billion more to buy tanks, missiles and fighter jets from China, North Korea, Russia and East European countries. These weapons, most of which have already been acquired, include 24 MiG-31s, 24 MiG-27s, 68 MiG-29s, 12 Tupolev-22M bombers and several Ilyushin-76 electronic surveillance aircraft. There was apparently little objection from the United States.

The Strategic Survey of the International Institute of Strategic Studies added in May that Iran had ordered 72 fighter airplanes from China and 200 T-72 tanks.

In addition, Iran has obtained at least 100 Iraqi aircraft, mostly Russian-made MiGs and transport planes, that fled to asylum at various Iranian airports during the last days of the Gulf War to escape the allied bombing attacks.

The Iranians have said they intend to keep the aircraft as part of the compensation they have been demanding from Baghdad for the Iraqi-initiated 1980-88 war.

Justice Richard Goldstone asked the organizations involved, "as a matter of urgency," to support a recommendation made by the United Nations secretary-general, Bu-tros Butros Ghali, for a full inquiry into the operations of the police; the Defense Force: the African National Congress's military wing; the Pan Africanist Congress's Azanian Peoples' Liberation Army. and the KwaZulu police, which many blacks regard as a military wing of the Inkatha Freedom Party.

Force Plus Diplomacy

It is urgent and right for the United Nations to authorize whatever it takes, including the use of force, to expose and shut down the places in Bosnia that press reports have identified as concentration camps. There are reasons to proceed with eyes open to the perils of a nulitary option, but there are deeper reasons not to appear paralyzed in the face of these shocking allegations. Politics and public pressure had something to do with bringing the Bush administration to support a fresh United Nations resolution. But how the president got there is not so important as that he contribute now to a firm international stand.

The broadening possibilities of military action put a further burden on the United States and others to consider two additional elements. First, while these latest accounts in a dismal series of Serbian barbarities highlight Serbia's role as villain of the Yugoslav tragedy, other groups — including the Muslims and Croats commonly depicted as victims of Scrbia — have played their own role in perpetrating provocations and arroc-ities against Serbs. This does not justify let-ting up on Serbs for the injuries they inflict. It does require broadening international con-cern to cover the injuries, lesser but real, that they suffer. Otherwise it becomes all the harder to push past Serbia's prickliness and paranoia and to engage it in policy review.

'the second requirement is to weld to any track of military action a parallel track for political action. Several political channels or forums, of course, have already been opened. But they have proved limited in scope and effectiveness. There must be new thinking on how best to organize a serious peace conference that would assemble all the Yngoslays and all the international and regional parties that count. This seems like a remote project, but it is an essential part of escaping the current frenzy and returning eventually to reason. Responsible people everywhere should be demanding that the parties move from an immediate preoccupation with struggle to a longer-term perspective on accommodation The United Nations ought to be considering a two-track resolution equipping the world organization to respond to reported atrocities in a manner that promotes, or at least does not prejudice, a search for peace. At the end of the day, after all, the people who are slaughtering each other are going to have to live together. Their current conflicts divide them. Their permanent circumstances — geographical, economic, political — necessarily draw them together. It is crucial to recognize that no halt can be expected in the fighting ontil some motion is established in the quest for a settlement - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Games to Remember

A Trade Test for Clinton

Trade policy is about to burst into the Thus the United States will continue to clared a truce while their young athletes, all male, went off to the Olympic Games. Those Games focused on footraces, in the nude because runners discovered they ran faster that way. The modern Games are bigger and better — and the athletes, male and female. are at least minimally clothed. But the essence of the Olympic truce survives.

For two weeks every four years, the Games focus world attention on human achievement. Even warring Serbs and Bosnians competed in Barcelona. South Africans were back for the first time since 1960. And the splintered Soviet Union had one last impressive moment as the Unified Team.

The Barcelona Games were the least political in decades - and the most commercial ever. But even intrusive commerce cannot dim the drama of peak human effort. If anyone demonstrated the depth of the athlete's commitment, it would have to be called a tie between America's Ron Karnangh in swimming and Britain's Derek Redmond in track, Mr. Karnaugh's father died as the Games began, from a heart attack at the opening ceremony; the shattered son stayed to race four days later. Mr. Redmond pulled a hamstring in a 400 meter race and crumpled to the ground, then got up and struggled on while his father raced from his seat in the American presidential campaign. President

George Bush is expected to announce this week a free trade pact with Mexico and Canada that, he promises, "will mean more jobs, more growth." But powerful Democrats, led by the House majority leader, Richard Gephardt, have threatened to op-

If the treaty turns out to be as good as leaked reports say, Mr. Clinton will have to choose between the protectionist politics of old and his pro-growth campaign promises.

Voters who want to know if he would have the backbone, as president, to stand up to powerful Democratic leaders when they are wrong may get a powerful clue this week.

Mr. Gephardt's contention that free trade will destroy American jobs is off base

- as is Mr. Bush's promise that it will create jobs. There will be selective gains and losses in various industries, but free trade will not affect the total number of employed Americans. At any time the Federal Reserve Board can pump up the economy, and create more jobs, by printing money.

But if it goes too far - by trying to drive unemployment below, say, 5 percent — it will ignite accelerating rates of inflation.

There were medaled heroes and heroine galore. Superstar Carl Lewis in the long jump and the 400 meter relay, winning his seventh and eighth golds in three Olympics. Swim-mer Pablo Morales, coming back from retire-ment to win an elusive gold. Robert Zmelik, a shy Czech with no coach, winning the decathlon competition for "world's best athlete." Gail Devers, winning gold in the 100 meter dash, then tumbling in the hurdles.

But those are achievers in big-time sports that people follow all the time, not just every fourth year. The Olympics also serve to elevate athletes in minor, even obscure sports. Their striving was no less heroic. Canada's champion sculler, Silken Laumann, was exemplary, courageously defy-ing an injury that severed the muscles of her right leg only three months ago. More than 200 of the 10,000 athletes who competed this time will go home with medals, justifiable pride and, for some, lucrative endorsement contracts. But every athlete without a moneyed backer should have a medal for the months and years of grit and determina-tion that got them to Barcelona. Bosnia: A Few Things the World Could Be Doing By Leslie H. Gelb

N EW YORK —There is no sure solution to the Bosnian horror, short of massive Western military intervention. Even that might not work, or work soon enough. So my quarrel with George Bush — and especially with European leaders and United Nations officials — is not their fail-ure to find a magic formula. It is their unwilling-ness to do what they can that might lessen or perhaps even end the bloodshed.

Western leaders warn the Serbs but maneuver for Bosnian surrender.

• Call upon the United Nations to establish a special commission right away to investigate war crimes under World War II Nuremberg rules. The evolving UN Security Council resolution on this seems to lack specificity and urgency. The commission should be empowered to hear evidence and issue arrest warrants. War criminals should know that from that day on they will never be able to set foot outside their countries without fear of trial.

London set for late August — and keep the negoti-ators at the table. As of now, they will meet for just three days, and surely accomplish nothing. The conferees should focus not on a cease-fire, which would only perpetuate Serb conquests, but on establishing the territorial boundaries of Bosnia, Serbia and Croatia, the creation of semi-autono-

None of them yet will consider actually protecting the Bosnian Muslims. Doing so, they insist, will lead only to a quagmire — as if they would lose all control over their actions once they dropped bombs on a Serbian airfield or sent ndos to rescue death camp victims.

These are dodges and excuses, not deeds and arguments worthy of leaders struggling with human catastrophe. These world leaders are telling us that they might send an armored car to guard a loaf of bread but will take no risks to stop a slaughter right outside their bedroom windows. Have they no humanity, no sense of all they might do short of massive military intervention, no vision of the international consequences?

Yugoslavia Is Europe's Business

By Fareed Zakaria

C AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — The modey crew of critics condemning the Bush administration's policy in the Yugoslav republics has upped the ante. Right-wingers and left-wingers alike are urging America to intervene militarily in the conflict With every fresh television broadcast out of Bosnia, one more congressman arises in indignation and demands that the president send in the troops.

Before the United States makes such a critical commitment of force, it is worth asking what principles would underlie its action.

The "realist" case for caution is simple. First, the United States has no strategic interests in the area. There is no danger of a general European war erupting out of the Yugo-slav caldron. The brutality in Bosnia is truly heartrending, as is brutality all over the world. But even if it knew how to stop ethnic groups from hat-ing and killing one another, the U.S. government does not have a mandate from its people to expend their lives and treasure trying to resolve these ancient blood feuds.

Second, Europeans, who have direct interests and ample armies to intervene in the Balkans, would certainly prefer to see the United States

The great moral principle the United States is asked take responsibility for this problem. Yugoslavia's terrain make it unlikely that military intervention would re-solve matters. Recall that Hitler sent ests but by moral principles. This school of thought, historically called "liberal internationalism" and asso-ciated with Woodrow Wilson, argues that politics abroad is like politics at home and must be guided by abstract notions of justice and liberty rather than prodence and calculation.

37 divisions into this area during World War II and was still unable to conquerit. General Lewis MacKenzie, the UN commander in the region, told ABC News "Nightline" that to solve this problem militarily would require an operation that would "make Desert Storm pale in comparison."

perative. Justice and liberty cannot be applied in one case and denied in smother, for might cannot make one thing more right than another. What is the universal moral precept for which the United States must join battle in the Balkans? The answer has been flashed on television screens for the last few weeks: the murder of civilians and of one ethnic group by another.

Yet that same tragedy is occurring nightly in several parts of the world, from Nigeria and Somalia in Africa to Azerbaijan and Armenia in Cen-tral Asia. Statistics are hard to come by, but clearly many more civilians have died in those countries than in the Yugoslav republics. The interventionists who rage with anger at the bloodsbed in Bosnia are silent about these bloodier ethnic wars. The television cameras are strangely absent

One is forced to conclude that the great moral principle that the United States is being asked to fight for in the former Yugoslavia is not justice — but justice for Europeans alone. Orphans are killed by rival ethnic groups all over the world. White orms are dying only in the Balkans.

Throw away the hypocrisy and the posturing and it becomes clear that the solution to the nightmare lies in Forty years of calm — brought by bipolarity and nuclear weapons, not some advance in civilization — has

Such a military intervention would presumably take the form of air and naval attack upon Serbian air power and the Serbs' heavy weapons and armor inside Bosnia-Herzegovina. This could be accompanied by exemplary attacks upon military and logistical targets inside Serbia itself.

The immediate objectives would be to destroy or expel the Serbian invasion forces that remain inside the internationally recognized legal frontiers of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and to interdict the support furmished by the Serbian and Croatian governments to the irregular forces of their nationality now fighting in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Since only ground forces could pacify Bosnia, the Bosnians would have to be armed and supported in clearing the enemy from their coun-

Any military intervention in support of Bosnia should be accompanied by a guarantee that the Bosnia-Herzegovina government remains pluralist in composition and accepts the Council of Europe's human rights principles, submitting itself to the jurisdiction of the European Commission on Human Rights and the European Court. (This is better to United Nations human rights standards, because the latter have no enforcement machinery, and in practice are not enforced.)

If there is to be an intervention, the UN forces now in Bosnia must be pulled out before they become hostages. Those in Sarajevo are in the most danger and are in a deteriorating situation where they now are accomplishing little. They should be

My own view is that Serbia's thus far successful territorial agpression, mass expulsions and practice of "ethnic cleansing" pose an unacceptable threat to the future the Western democratic community. It does so in a practical way, since if Serbia succeeds in Bosnia, as it is now doing, Serbia and Montenegro will next be "cleansed" of their alien minorities, generating new masses of refugees, and an effort will be made to "cleanse" Kosovo of its ethnic Albanian majority, with war between Serbia and Albania, and possibly others in the Balkans, all 10NDON — Continuing from last night's [Aug. 8] debate in the House of Commons, Mr. A. Balfour expressed surprise that Mr. Gladstone repeated, under the guise of Irish history, astonishing fables. Mr. Gladstone left the House a few minutes of the Mr. Balfour beautiful Mr. Balfour beautiful Mr. after Mr. Balfour began speaking. It is impossible to suppose that Mr. Gladstone was guilty of deliberate discourtesy, and we are forced to con-clude that his rhetorical effort was too much for his physical powers and that it was necessary that he should at once seek rest. If Mr. Gladstone thus feels the effects of age after a single debate, what prospect is there of his enduring the ceaseless labors of the Cabinet and Treasury Bench?

WASHINGTON—If you wish to understand the Soviet Union, Irving Kristol wrote 10 years ago, "you can make an excel-lent beginning by going to the mov-ies and seeing 'The Godfather.'
Why? Because "the Soviet system since Stalin may be usefully regarded as a regime of Mañoso types who, incredibly, have become the political establishment."

Ten years ago. ft is hard to re-member 1982. In this amnesic election year, it is hard to remember that there ever was a Soviet Union. But 1982 was a privotal year in the Cold War. The Soviets had deployed missiles in Europe, and the NATO counterdeployment was meeting enormous popular resistance. U.S.-Soviet tensions were high, Millions were demonstrating in the streets against American nuclear weapons. Democrats in Congress were de-manding a miclear freeze and a re-sumption of arms negotiations. Amid all this clamor for reason and compromise, Mr. Kristol insisted that reason and compromise are not how you deal with the Mafia. At the time, the virulent anti-communism of Mr. Kristol and his fellow neoconservatives was widely considered excessive, inordinate. Ten years later, the azimating proposition of neoconservatism — that Soviet communism represented unmitigated evil, resistance to which was the overriding moral impera-tive of "the Free World" (a term neocons refused to drop) - has been entirely vindicated by history. Indeed, today in Moscow, Mr. Kristol's Mafia theory is the basis for one of the most important (and underreported) trials of our time.

Before Russia's highest court, the Soviet Communist Party stands acman rights scholar José Zalaquett

cused of criminal conspiracy. Not of perpetrating one, but of being one—a criminal enterprise that for 70 years enslaved the politics, economy, judiciary, culture, the life of the Soviet Union.

The trial is being held because Russian Communists are challenging Boris Yeltsin's ban on the Communist Party, and Mr. Yeltsin is countercharging that the ban is jus-tified because the Soviet Commumists were not a political party but, well, a Mafia. The real Mafia infilwen, a Maria. Ine real Maria infil-trates legitimate businesses and uses them as a front for its illegal activi-ties. The Soviet Communists took over — in fact, created — the Soviet government in order to control, exploit and terrorize. The government was no government at all but a pup-pet, a monstrous Mafia-style front.

The Moscow trial has been compared to the Nuremberg trials. Indeed, both are attempts at ideological detoxification. The Russian democrats, however, are not seeking to punish individuals. They are seeking only to indict abstractions: the party and the past. Very Russian, and very wise, because the circumstances surrounding Russia's decommunization are very different from those that attended Germany's denazification after World War IL

The Nazis had been totally defeated in war. Germany was prostrate has argued, under these conditions full justice—that is, punishment— may not be possible. What is possi-ble is truth: exposing with docu-mentary evidence the evils of the previous regime. Chile, where the former dictator still controls the army, is, like Russia, constrained from pursuing full "denazification." Accordingly, its new democratic government com-missioned an official report on the country's political victims that accounted in excraciating detail for every one of the 2,025 people murdered by the Pinochet regime (as well as others who fell in the con-current civil strife). Publication and proclamation of the truth produced in Chilean society a remarkable ca-tharsis, the beginning of national reconciliation, and a degree of social peace achieved by few post-dictatorial countries. Catharsis, reconciliation and social peace will be infinitely harder in Russia where the thug regime was in power not for 17 years but for 70, and where it killed not two thousand people but 30 to 40 million. Nonetheless, there is no hope for the new Russia unless it begins with the truth about the old. Justice can wait. Indeed, justice is an elusive concept when the accased is a system in which, as Vaclay Havel has argued, tens of millions were to some degree or other complicit. But if not justice, then truth. At the Moscow trial the prosecutor has laid in evidence 36 volumes of hitherto secret Commupist Party documents, detailing its involvement in everything from forced famines to ethnic deportations to international terrorism.

The truth-telling begins. It looks suspiciously as Irving Kristol had it 10 years ago. Washington Post Writers Group

CAPITAL MARKETS

Test for Dollar With Only Central Banks on Its Side

By Carl Gewirtz nal Herold Tribune

ARIS—Fireworks on the foreign-exchange market should enliven what otherwise might be a midsummer full this week. The skirmish between traders pressing for a lower dollar and monetary authorities seeking to maintain an orderly calm began in New York late Friday, just after European markets had closed for the week.

The timing appeared ideal, hitting a vacation-thinned market at its most torpid stretch of trading. By all accounts, the market was also very fragile because it was short the dollar — most trading positions were set up in expectation of further declines.

As a result, when the Federal Reserve aided by the Bank of Canada sold Deutsche marks to buy dollars, the U.S. currency

'A concerted rose more than a pfennig, to 1.4750 DM. But by the close, the dollar had fallen back to 1.4678 DM, barely above the day's low of 1.4630 DM and down about a plennig from the previous day. That set the stage for a test of wills this week between traders Successful. expecting further declines and approach by central banks to support the dollar would be officials trying to hold the line.

The dollar has very little going for it. Its biggest handicap is the the dollar has very name going for it. His biggest namoneap is the ever-widening gap in short-term interest rates versus the mark, which now stands at 6 7/16 percentage points. The still-singgish U.S. economy, confirmed by Friday's disappointing employment data for July, suggests the Federal Reserve may need to again lower U.S. interest rates. That would further widen the rate gap because there is still no sign that Germany is about to cut its rates.

At the same time, the mark stands to be the major beneficiary from worries about the French referendum on the Maastricht treaty on European Union, set for Sept. 20. Rejection would abruptly half the move to create a single currency and, in the view of many analysts, trigger a realignment of exchange rates within Europe.

EVERTHELESS, "a sustained, concerted approach by the central banks to support the dollar would be successful," said James P. Borden, head of currency trading at Chase Manhattan in New York. "If there is no follow-through on the intervention, we could see the dollar 2 to 5 percent lower against the mark."

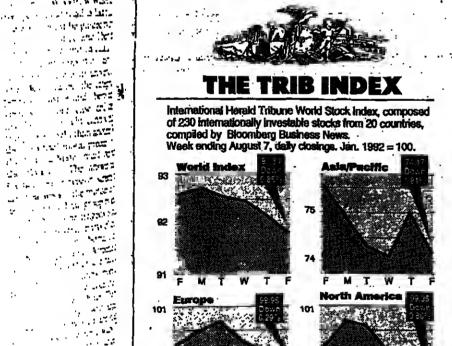

The central banks will be active, another New York banker said,

"because the last thing the United States wants in the run-up to the election is the negative impact of headlines declaring the dollar has fallen to record lows." In this banker's view, heavy intervention will forestall any drop below 1.45 DM. He said he saw "no huge volume or pressure" in the market to challenge the central banks from

Intervention, he added, will not be aimed at turning the dollar up but rather will be "aimed to guide the market to a trading range of 1.45-1.49 DM, which is appropriate given the huge disparity in short-term interest rates."

A European banker said traders remain mostly short on the dollar, but he insisted that there's not a lot of conviction behind

Australia Affirms Airline Sale Plan

SYDNEY - The Australian government remains committed to the sale of its two airlines - the international carrier Qantas Airways and the domestic carrier Australian Airlines - despite opposition from within the ruling Labor Party, two government ministers said

Industry sources have said British Airways PLC, Singapore Airlines Ltd. and Air New Zealand Ltd. have expressed interest in taking a stake in Qantas

Under Prime Minister Paul Keating's plan, Qantas would pay 400 million Australian dollars ($294.6 million) for Australian Airlines. The merged entity would be privatized through the sale of a stake to a third party and a public float, with the government retaining a share.

"The government is committed to it, and I'm confident that the party, as they have in the past, will see the sense in terms of the alternatives that we've got with the money," Transport Minister Bob Collins said on television.

Social Security Minister Neal Blewett told the same program that any move to block the sale would "add to the difficulties the government faces." The center and left wings of the Labor Party are opposed to the

The center and left wings of the Labor Party are opposed to me sale of the airlines, saying it goes against party policy. The party's executive group is to meet this week to discuss a poll of members. The Labor Party's national secretary, Bob Hogg, said the polled opinion of party members on changing party policy, a necessary step, could be ignored to assure that the proposed sale goes forward. "I believe the budget outcome and the future commercial viability of the airline is much more important than the party processes if the party's processes prove to be deficient," Mr. Hogg said.

TWA Plan at Impasse On Pension Liabilities

By Adam Bryant New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Carl C. Icahn, chairman of Trans World Airlines, and the federal agency that insures the airline's pension fund have apparently broken off talks over Mr. Icahn's plan to reorganize the bankrupt carrier.

Those talks, under way for roughly a week, have focused on negotiating an agreement with the airline's unionized employees and creditors to buy out Mr. Icahn, who has run the airline for several turbulent years.

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. is chiefly worried about Mr. Icaho's hability for the airline's pension fund, which has a current shortfall of $1.2 billion, roughly half its total liabilities.

As the majority owner of TWA. Mr. Icahn remains responsible for the fund. The federal agency has said it will oppose any reorganization plan that breaks TWA from Mr. Icahn's affiliated companies unless protection is in place to cover the shortfall.

People close to the negotiations, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said Priday that no new meetings had been scheduled for this week.

Other parties have said they were continuing to talk about the proposal. The Air Line Pilots Association, for example, has scheduled more talks for this week over its biggest con-cerns, including pensions and job security.

The agreement under discussion calls for Mr. lcahn to give up his 90 percent stake in the carrier. In return, employees would make concessions on wages and benefits to gain a 45 percent equity stake.

TWA's creditors would forgive two-thirds, or about $1 billion, of the company's debt for a 55 percent equity stake. Mr. Icahn also said he would provide $150 million as a loan to cover operating costs until a reorganization plan was approved by bankruptcy court.

The federal perision agency is Icahn is trying to minimize his liabilities to the pension fund, which covers 42,000 employees.

China's Thirst for Markets Grows

A Shenzhen Share Scramble Reserves Put in Foreign Bonds

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche

SHENZHEN, China - China's latest stock offering unleashed violent scuffles and caused at least one death over the weekend as hundreds of thousands of people engulied this city and officials expressed concern that many of the would-be capitalists did not know what they were doing. The government has called a special meeting in Beijing this week on shareholding systems and the fledgling stock market, state-run media reported Sunday. The reports expressed determination to forge ahead with market-oriented economic reforms, but sounded caution over widespread investor ignorance of the risks in stocks and technical problems. "Some people have little understanding of stocks," Liu Hongru, vice minister of the State Commission for Restructuring the Economy, was quoted as saying by the official news agency Xinhua. "Sellers want to raise funds while buyers want to earn money. They care little about the transformation of the operational mechanism of industrial enterprises." In Shenzhen, police used electronic cattle prods and batons to keep

Hong Kong hoping to buy shares.

Five million applications went on sale Sunday, of which 10 percent will be chosen by lottery for the right to buy up to 1,000 shares apiece. Each application cost 100 yuan, or about $18—about half an average person's monthly income.

The Shenzhen Stock Exchange plans to issue new shares with a face value of $92.6 million this year. The companies selling shares include a soft drink manufacturer, a glass company and an electronics producer. Hong Kong television reports from Shenzhen showed huge crowds of people waiting for share applications and random violence in disputes over position in the long lines of hopefuls.

BELIING - China has investedmore than $10 billion in foreign bonds to diversify its growing for-eign-exchange reserves, a Bank of China official said Sunday.

The figure represents roughly one quarter of China's reserves of $42.66 billion.

"We cannot just put all our foreign exchange in foreign banks and wait for the carnings from the interest," Huo Tuanjie, a senior offi-cial in the bank's foreign exchange department, was quoted as saying by the China Daily. "If the interest rate declines, we would suffer heavy losses."

Mr. Huo said the bank dealt securities in the United States, Japan. the Netherlands and Switzerland. He declined to reveal profits or the bank's exposure to each market.

Separately, China set up a national swap market for foreign currency on Saturday in an effort to unify the exchange rate for the yuan. The government has expressed alarm in recent months over the alarm in recent months over the growing disparity between the official exchange rate of about 5.4 yuan to the dollar and rates on the more than 100 regional swap markets. The yuan fell to 7.4935 to the dollar in Shanghai on Friday.

The new swap market will pave the way for trading in currency futures and a variety of foreign currencies, press reports said. An article in the China Daily also said the government was considering scrapping a quota system under which Chinese enterprises must sell foreign-currency earnings to the government in return for vouchers for a controlled amount of foreign exchange.

China's Airlines to Seek Investment, Hire Foreigners

BELIING - China's state-owned airlines plan to let foreigners invest in them and may also hire overseas managers for the first time as part of a campaign to reform state enterprises, the official China Daily said.

The Civil Aviation Administration of China drew up a program to improve services on China's airlines, which to now have shown little desire to be competitive with foreign carriers. CAAC is the umbrella organization that over-sees 19 government-run domestic and interna-

The CAAC director, Jiang Zhuping, said the system would be restructured into a "joint-stock enterprise" offering shares to domestic airlines and foreign businesses. "Domestic air-ports may be built and operated in the form of Sino-foreign joint ventures," he said, although he gave no timetable.

"According to the program, foreign businesses are to be welcome to invest in China's airlines, which would also open their facilities to various types of cooperation with foreign partners," the newspaper said on Saturday.
"We may engage foreigners as managers and consultants," Mr. Jiang said. The state-run Chinese carriers are a byword among travelers for indifferent service and dubious safety. No privately owned airlines exist in China.

The program is part of ambitious reforms spearheaded by the senior leader, Deng Xiaoping, to revamp state enterprises and promote capitalist-style economic reforms.

The CAAC program is "designed to set a fresh pace for the country's accelerated drive of opening up its economic sectors to foreign investment and cooperation," the newspaper said.

Sabena Has $10 Million Loss in Half

BRUSSELS - Sabena, Belgium's state-owned airline, has announced an operating loss of around 300 million francs ($9.9 million) in the first half of 1992, Belgian media reported over the weekend.

No comparative data have been published for the first half of 1991, and Sabena executives were unavailable to comment on the latest reports.

Sabena announced an operating loss of 2.16 billion francs in the first four months of 1991, after being badly hit by the drop in air traffic during the Gulf War. For all of last year, the airline posted an operat-

The company cited lower-than-expected passenger numbers and worldwide problems of airline overca-pacity as dampening business, the reports said.

The news comes just days after Deutsche Lufthausa AG reported that its pretax loss widened to more than 550 million Deutsche marks ($372 million) in the first half from 331 million DM a year earlier.

Belga said Sabena directors remained uncertain about the outlook for the rest of the year.

The Belga news agency and L'Echo financial daily on Saturday quoted Sabena as saying its performance they invested under an alliance plan that collapsed.

Cry Hulbert! and Unmask the Dogs of Newsletters

By Susan Antilla

New York Times Service NEW YORK - No one giving investment advice in a newsletter gets a perfect score. Indeed, it is the rare adviser who can match the brainless performance of the Standard & Poor's 500 with any regularity, raising the question of whether the pricey newsletters are worth the investment in them.

Nevertheless, and for whatever reason, investors continue to part with subscription fees as high as $525 a year to glean the wisdom of the folks who write newsletters. Locating the top-performing advisers is easy. Mark Hulbert, editor western Bell Telephone Co. and BellSouth Corp. reached separate agreements with WOLKETS O while negotiators for unions and three other regional telephone companies continued talks beyond Saturday's midnight strike deadline.

Higher pay and job security were the main issues in the talks affecting 219,000 workers at the five telephone companies. Both sides said they wanted to continue talking and that strikes were unlikely.

The new agreement between Southwestern Bell and the Communications Workers of America, which must be ratified by union members, includes a basic wage increase of about 12 percent over three years and improvements in health insurance, pension bene-fits and job classifications, said Jennings Wooldridge, a union spokesman in St. Louis.

BellSouth spokesman Terry Johnson said he had no details of the tentative agreement reached in Atlanta. "The important thing is there is no strike," he said.

Similar oegotiations were under way in Washington, Chicago and Oakland, California, between three other Baby Bell regional phone companies -Bell Atlantic Corp., Ameritech Corp. and Pacific Telesis Group — and the CWA.

Farm Subsidies The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Agriculture Department investigators say they have found foreign-owned farms skirting the law to collect thousands of dollars in federal subsidies.

The department's Office of Inspector General said it discovered the violations during an investigation in Arkansas that focused on a foreignowned corporation that manages farms for foreign owners, American Agricultural Service Arkansas Inc.

Investigators looked at 19. farms operating on foreign-owned land in Arkansas and found that five of the owners had received subsidies of $45,177 in 1989 and 1990, although they were ineligible for such payments, according to an audit obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

An Agriculture Department official said the problem ap-pears to be an isolated inci-dent, but two Democratic lawmakers said they're concerned it may stretch further.

A foreign landlord is prohibited from receiving subsidy payments unless the individual provides substantial active, personal labor.

U.S. Consumers Pay Down Debts

nberg Bustness News WASHINGTON — U.S. con-sumers, working off the debt hang-over of the 1980s, cut their borrowing for the fifth consecutive month in June, the government said. The $1.019 billion decline left consumer debt at a seasonally adjusted $721.909 billion in June, the lowest since April 1990, the Federal Reserve Board said Friday. The decline was confined to auto loans, which decreased by $2.798 billion.

Because the recovery is singgish, many consumers remain worried about losing their jobs and their homes and are trying to improve their finances by saving more. "People are not making those spontaneous purchases as they did in the late 1980s," said Jean Sundrla at Evans Economics.

NEW YORK - With U.S. interest rates sliding to levels not seen in years, American investors are in-creasingly drawn to short-term global bond funds that offer far higher yields than dollar-based money-market funds and bank certificates of deposit. At the end of 1989, five shortterm global income funds held a total of $480.5 million. Midway through 1992, 40 funds held $22.5 billion, a 50-fold increase in less than three years, said Lipper Analytical Services Inc.

Have these funds delivered on their promises? Yes and no.

Yields are high, but some share prices are volatile. "Whether they've worked is a function of what you thought they were meant to do," said A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical.

Perhaps one reason for the success of these funds is that the vast majority are sold by brokers, "who tend to simplify complex subjects, focusing on yield without emphasizing the risks involved," he said. Fund Directions, an industry newsletter, expressed reservations about how investors view the funds: "Price stability is the prod-uct's Achilles' heel."

securities that mature in less than

The yields are the best explanation for their popularity. The average 30-day yield was 7.9 percent as of June 30, higher than anything except junk-bond funds. By contrast, money market yields hovered between 3 and 4 percent.

The four existing funds in 1990 returned an average of 16.4 percent that year, more than double the money market 7.8 percent.

In 1991, however, the advantage narrowed. The group, which had grown to 17 funds, returned an average of 6.5 percent, only about a percentage point higher than su-persafe money-market funds.

However, investors who held shares in the funds existing since 1989 carned a cumulative return of 32.3 percent, compared with 16 percent for the money market.

Share stability is another story. While money market share prices are fixed at $1, share prices of global income funds fluctuate.

Last year, the worst performer, Equitable Short-Term World A, lost 8.58 percent of its share price. So investors who needed to withdraw money at the end of the year would have received only $9.14 for every $10 invested, on top of a sales load.

Of the funds that have been funds take advantage of interest around since 1991, five lost more rates that are higher than those in than 4 percent of share value by

O & Y Claims Lenders Ready to Compromise

TORONTO - Less than two weeks before a court-ordered restructuring deadline, the insolvent real estate giant Olympia & York Developments Ltd. and its creditors have replaced combativeness with cooperation.

The creditors appear to have dropped calls for a segregation of O & Y assets and an end to court protection and have ceased to demand property foreclosures.

O & Y spokesmen said six creditor groups, representing all 91 lenders owed $12.6 billion, see reorganization as the only hope for some return. "Creditors are no longer pursuing a legal course but are in a consultative stage. There's a general recognition that we are making progress," said an O & Y executive.

The company is to file a formal reorganization plan on Aug. 21 as required by a Canadian bankruptcy court, but it will deal only with project lenders and other significant secured creditors, the O & Y spokesman said.

After that, the company — which has already defaulted on $1.28 billion in debt — will negotiate details with lender committees to set a standard for smaller creditors and at the same time pave the way for a long-term business plan. In a progress report filed with the court last week, O & Y described an "emerging consensus" among creditors, the company and its 28 subsidiaries. Lenders say O & Y's problems are so severe that no workable restructuring plan will emerge before the court protection runs out Oct. 21, O & Y is attempting the biggest private restructuring in corporate history.

Sources say O & Y has offered its best-secured creditors swaps of securities including distress preferred shares, common stock and new bonds for debt. The company is negotiating individually with secured creditors on arrangements that would leave some with no equity.

O & Y, owned by Toronto's Reichmann family and with holdings around the world, has asked lenders to the Canadian parent and the troubled Canary Wharf project in London to forgo debt payments and extend new loans totaling $850 million in exchange for majority stakes in the company's holdings.

Last year, O & Y had a $1.7 billion loss, excluding a writedown for Canary Wharf, and a company spokesman said the writedown world.

Canary Wharf, and a company spokesman said the writedown would not be included in second-quarter results to be filed with creditors Monday for each of O & Y's subsidiaries.

WORLD STOCKS IN REVIEW

Amsterdam

The stock exchange eased modestly, with the CBS all-share index sliding 1.6 points during the week, to close on Friday at 197.0. Analysis bloom the stock of the lysts blamed the drop on the weakening dollar.

Total stock exchange volume reached 6.1 billion Dutch guilders, including 2.2 billion in equities. Philips slid 0.30 on the week to 23.70 guilders after reporting fresh weakness in consumer electronics. Unilever rose 2.10 to 184 and Akzo was up 3.50 at 147.30 after reporting second-quarter figures that were broadly in line with expecta-tions. Earnings from Royal Dutch also were in line with expectations, Trading was hesitant as investors reacted to mixed six-month results from banks. The DAX index fell 5.92 points, or 0.37 percent, to close at 1,609.50.

Deutsche Bank, which reported a 3.2 percent drop in first-half op-erating profit, fell 9 DM to 628 DM. Dresdner Bank and Com-merzbank posted higher profits; Dresdner rose 10.80 to 337.80 and Commerzbank rose 2.80 to 240.30. Allianz, still hounded by concerns about its underwriting results following the previous week's negative rating by Deutsche Bank, tum-bled 32 to 1805.

Hong Kong

Prices and volume fell in lackluster trading. The Hang Seng Index shed 30.63 points, or 0.5 percent, to close Friday at 5,850.93. Only the shock news that bluecorded a loss of 78 million Hong Kong dollars in the first half ener-gized an otherwise dismal week.

Hutchison, among the most-active issues, fell 50 cents to 15.90 dollars. Cheung Kong, which owns 40 percent of Hutchison, fell 70 to Brokers said the market was relieved that there was no rights issue. "However, the million-dollar question of whether Hutchison will do a placement or rights issue later still remains," one broker said.

Prices took a beating as the mar-ket was hit by a double whammy of bad news from British Petroleum and Barclays Bank.

The Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index shed 49.5 points, or 2.1 percent, to close on Priday at 2,350.1.

Investors started the week edgy as they watched the pound fall to its lowest level since entering the European Monetary System's ex-change-rate mechanism in October

But the biggest blow came Thursday when Barclays an-nounced an 87 percent fall in pretax profit, to £51 million, in the first half. Also, the bank's president, Sir John Quinton, forecast the recession could last two more years. Giants' Move Would End Rivalry With Dodgers

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

Once a Giant and now a Dodger, Brett Butler understood the rivalry. And feared it. The little center fielder didn't want to let last year's National League West race boil down to the Los Angeles Dodgers having to win against the San Francisco Giants at Candlestick Park on the final weekend. The Giants are out of it." Butler kept telling his teammates, "but they'll be ready for us."

Entering that final series, the Dodgers and the Atlan-ta Braves were tied for first. But when the Dodgers lost to the Giants twice while the Braves were winning twice, the divisional title was settled. And when Will Clark was asked about the Dodgers' demise, the Giants' first baseman cackled. "Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha."

But now the longest-running rivalry in American sports is an endangered species.

Unless the Giants are prevented from moving to St. Petersburg, Florida, next season by a vote of the other major league club owners, the 2,500 miles (4,050 kilometers) between the teams will end the rivalry after a century of interborough and intrastate conflict. The teams were close enough in California for the last 35 years for Will Clark to cackle, but until 1958, they were even closer in the Polo Grounds and Ebbets Field, in New York City.

Only a subway ride apart, those Giants and Dodgers played each other 22 times a season, every so often with the National League pennant at stake. As it was in 1934 after the rivalry's most memorable insult.

During the off season, Bill Terry, the Giants' manager, assessed the chances of his defending World Series champions to repeat. One by one, he rated six other National League teams, but then a sportswriter asked, "What about Brooklyn?" "Brooklyn?" Terry asked. "Is Brooklyn still in the

So annoyed were the citizens of Brooklyn and the franchise itself that General Manager Bob Quinn decided he needed a livelier manager, be fired Max Carey and hired Casey Stengel. At the Polo Grounds game," Dodger pitcher Jerry Reuss said. "They were on the final weekend that season, the sixth-place just happy the Dodgers lost."

Dodgers knocked the Giants out of the pennant race.
"If Terry and his players don't feel good now," Stengel snapped, "wait until they don't get that World

Scries money their wives have already spent."

The Giants returned the favor in 1951 on Bobby Thomson's pennant-winning home run off Ralph Branca, only three years after the rivalry's most surprising moment: Leo Durocher's midseason switch to Durocher? After all his years as the Dodgers' manager? After he had used Mel Ott, the Giants' manager, as an example of why "nice guys finish last"? But Durocher set about building "my kind of team, guys who come to play," obtaining Eddie Stanky and Alvin Dark from the Boston Braves and installing a rookie in center field, Willie Mays.

Over those years the rivalry flourished as never

Sal (the Barber) Maglie shaved the Dodgers shaggers with his curveball. Alluding to Durocher's cologne and the Giants manager's wife, the actress Laraine Day, Jackie Robinson shouted, "Hey, Leo, are you still wearing Laraine's perfume?" Convinced that Durocher had observed a knockdown pitch, Carl Furtillo stiffered a broken head in a Polo Grannds melec illo suffered a broken hand in a Polo Grounds melee.
When Mays knocked himself groggy against the wall making a catch in Ebbets Field, Robinson rushed to the fallen center fielder.

"I thought Jackie was coming out to see how I was," Mays said, "but he just wanted to make sure the ball was still in my glove."

Even 350 miles apart, the cultural differences between San Francisco and Los Angeles farmed the nivalry's emotional flames. In a 1962 playoff, the Giants walked to the World Series on right-hander Stan Williams's wildness. Juan Marichal conked Dodger catcher John Roseboro with a bat. Ten years ago, Joe Morgan's homer prevented the Dodgers from forcing a divisional playoff with the Braves and set off a Candlestick celebration.

"The fans weren't happy that the Giants won the

Pakistan Wins England Cricket Series

LONDON (Renters) - Pakistan's bowlers ripped through England's batsmen on Sunday, winning the lifth test match and the series for the

The English team, chasing Pakistan's total of 380, managed a paltry 207 in its first innings, resumed Sunday on 137 runs in its second innings and was quickly all out for 174. Pakistan came back in to bat and scored and was querry all out for 174, Paristan came back in to out and scored the two runs it needed to win by 10 wickets.

Throughout the five tests, of which Pakistan won two and England one, the English batters had trouble dealing with the speed of the Pakistan bowlers Wasim Akram and Wagar Younis.

Azinger Takes BMW Title in Playoff

MUNICH (AP) — Paul Azinger made a 6-foot (1.8 meter) putt for birdie on the first hole of a five-man playoff Sunday and won the $1 million BMW Open golf tournament for the second time in three years. The American almost hit his drive into a pond on the first playoff hole. The ball stayed up, though, and he hit his second shot near the pin.

The other playoff participants — Anders Forsbrand of Sweden, Bernhard Langer of Germany, Mark James of Britain and Glen Day of the United States — missed their birdle tries. All finished 72 holes in 266.

Wallabies Start South Africa Tour

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) — Australia's Wallabies, rugby union's world champions, arrived in South Africa on Sunday for their first tour

Australia arrived two weeks after New Zealand's All Blacks, who beat South Africa's junior Springboks 25-10 in Pretona on Saturday.

The Wallabies' first match will be against the regional Western Transvaal team in Potchefstroom on Tuesday.

For the Record

BARCELONA — On the final day of the Olympic athletics meet, the United States left the world two more calling cards of speed. The American teams won three of the four relays, with both men's teams blasting away world records.

In other events. Americans could only appland the better work by others, particularly that by Dieter Baumann of Germany in the men's 5,000 meters and Fermin Cacho of Spain, a stunning and emotional winner in the men's 1,500. They both outran a group of African runners for surprising victories.

Baumann, who finished fourth at the world championships last year in Tokyo after three Africans, had five behind him this time, after running down Paul Bitok of Kenya and Fita Bayisa of Ethiopia in the final stretch to win in 13 minutes, 12.52 seconds with a margin of 19hundredths of a second.

Cacho's time, 3:40.12, beat Rachid Basir of Morocco and Mohammed Sulaiman, who brought the Middle East country of Qatar its first medal ever in Olympic track and field. Noureddine Morceli, the Algerian who had established himself as the world's leading 1,500-meter runner the last two years, was boxed in most of the way and finished seventh.

His teammate, Hassiba Boulmerka, the women's world champion in the 1,500 last year, fared better. She won in 3:55.30 to become the second African woman to win an Olympic gold after Derartu Tulu of Ethiopia won the 10,000 on Friday night

They were back in the United States by Sunday morning. It was finished. Just like that.

"You will see perhaps another team of professionals in the Olym-pics," said the U.S. coach, Chuck Daly, said after the 117-85 victory over Croatia, "but not like this team. This team, with Larry Bird and Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan, this team has a mystique and a quality that has been built over 15 years."

The next Olympics will have a team of people who are relatively unknown," Daly said. "They'll be known to a point, but not like these people. This was a majestic team."

None of the selfishness that might have been expected ever showed through. The final game was not an expression of killer instinct, but of sentiment.

They already had ravaged Croatia in a preliminary. Saturday night, the Croatians were trailing by only 43-36 late in the first half when the U.S. players held hands and pulled away. In three minutes, the lead swelled to 18 as the ball was passed like a conversation among friends.

As Barcelona's Flame Dies, Whatizit Springs From Embers

By Ian Thomsen

BARCELONA — After playing host to the world for 16 days of athletic joy, Barcelona breathed a sigh and allowed the Olympic flame atop Montjuic to die ont Sunday night. The Olympic flag was passed from Barcelona's mayor, Pasquall Maragall, president of the Barcelona Olympic Organizing Committee, to Mayor Maynard Jackson of Atlanta, host of the 1996 symmer Games. 1996 summer Games.

Seats in the Olympic Stadium filled slowly with life in the last hours of daylight as the last of the XXV Olympic athletes entered the track in completion of the men's marathon. Many collapsed past the finish line, ravaged by the final climb up Montjuic.

Less than two hours later, following the applanded entrance of King Juan Carlos, the national anthems of Catalonia and Spain were played. The Spanish comedic group El Tricicle then wandered onto the track, chased by a pack of 30 disorderly walkers, all dressed in white uniforms. The trio turned the pack backward and led them off of the track, only to be beaten by the pack to the finish line while El Tricicle argued over how best to break the finish line tape. That encouraged laughter in a setting in which thousands of athletes previously had settled the culmination of their life's training.

The mounted division of the Barcelona police force performed a tattoo on the blue floor of the stadium, accompanied to the guitar mu-sie of the hlind Spanish composer Joaquin Rodrigo. The 82-year-old tattoo was performed by 24 lancers in classic red costume.

A young ballaora danced "the will o' the wisp," by Manuel de Falla, the Spanish composer and pianist who died in exile in Argentina in 1946. Around her, the Cristina Hoyos fla-menco company minicked the dance's evocative flames, while offstage the Spanish mezzosoprano Teresa Berganza sang to the mystery of love, appearing and vanishing like a will o' the reflection of the Mediterranean and Hispanic soul, indeed an expression of the contradictions of the human soul in search of eternal beauty. And then the athletes were greeted for the last time to the Olympic faufare, composed and conducted by Carles Santos, and amid the parade of flags from participating countries, which were gradually placed around the stage. In a change from previous closing ceremonies, representatives of the 15,000 athletes and officials who took part in these Games were seated with the public in the stands, and captured by spotlight as the parade of flags advanced.

Beneath the Olympic flame were raised the flags of Greece, the original Olympic country; of Spain, bidding farewell with the playing of the Olympic anthem; and the United States, preparing for the 1996 Games in Atlanta. Maragall gave thanks to participants and volunteers

A video introducing the world to Atlanta was shown, while on stage a group of dancers per-formed a jazzy ballet devoted to sport. Finish-ing with somersaults, they then danced through strips of blue silk representing the sea. On stage their new dance evoked images of the leaping, boxing, football, votieyball and other sports that draw the world together every four years time. In the end, the dancers applaud the winners, who then brought out the mascot of the 1996 Games:

Named Whatizit, it is a computer-generated character wearing oversized sneakers, with stars for eyes, Olympic rings for eyebrows, and four-

While Placido Domingo sang the Olympic anthem, two volunteers lowered the Olympic flag, which was passed onto 16 children dressed in white, one for each day of the competition, who carried the flag away across the stadium floor — "upon this ground and under this sky," went the anthem, "which has witnessed thy unperishable fame."

In its final moments of life, the Olympic flame overlooking the stadium was serenaded by the Cant dels ocells, a Catalan folk song performed by cellis Lluis Claret and soprano Victoria de los Angeles. To the vibrato of the cello, the flame was quenched and the stadium fell into darkness.

Light was rescued by a 40-minute celebration beginning with lights and fireworks, culminating in an explosion of red and yellow over the public.

As Petter Moshus, vice president in charge of design for the 1994 Winter Olympics in Lille-bammer, Norway said, "To be honest, I don't emblematic of the Milky Way galaxy then fell from the sky, and the last celebration was on. from the sky, and the last celebration was on.

What followed was a celebration of the stars and the planets, the fire of the playful devil, the meeting of the bird and the serpent. A great dragon projected itself 25 meters (about 80 feet) above the rim of the stadium, surrounded by explosions and lightning. The festival was on.

"Friends for life," a composition by Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber, was sung hy Josep Carreras and Sarah Brightman. At once a magic peal of bells was heard, and a silver boat was navigated to the center of the stadium. Among its crew was Cohi, mascot of the Barcelona games, waving goodbye to the crowd. A thou-sand fireworks lighted the sky, and the Games echoed away to the joy of the rumba, danced on PARIS — Autobiography inevitably involves a dollop of delusion, evasion and just plain getting even: a delicate mix which not everyone can handle as Frank Sinarra has. To, as he put it, "set the record straight," he has agreed to a five-hour CBS television life story — produced by his daughter, Tina. "I'm satisfied we got to the truth." the writer of the series told the Los Angeles Times.

Peter Viertel, a screenwriter and novelist best known for "White Hunter, Black Heart," a povel inspired by his adventures with John Huston at the time of "The African Queen," has chosen to tell his story through his more celebrated chuns. Viertel's memoir, "Dangerous Friends: At Large with Huston and Hemingway in the Fifties," published this month by Nan A. Talese/Doubleday in New York.

A dangerous friend, Viertel said over lunch near his old Paris stamping ground, the Avenue Mon-taigne, is one who leads you astray by his illusions

"I think what made these friends dangerous is that they thought of me as being equally given to their lifestyles — their attitude toward women and toward money, which I never had. Papa was a dangerous friend because he could turn on you and because his influence was tremendous, constantly saying you've got to quit whoring in Hollywood. Sometimes you haven't got what it takes to make this kind of decision."

The bullfighter Luis Miguel Dominguin is dangerous for his forked tongue, Ava Gardner would have been dangerous had Viertel, a noted romanc-er, not resisted her charms, Orson Welles was not dangerous at all and suggested to the heedless Viertel that screenwriting was as honorable, and more modern, than writing novels, but Welles gets

"I really liked him better, he was basically more adorable than Papa or John," Viertel says. The novelist Irwin Shaw, whom Hemingway dismissed as a Brooklyn Tolstoy, was not dangerous, having known Viertel too long to have illusions. Viertel's agent, Swifty Lazar, is, he says, the most dangerous friend.

"He was always coming up with fabulous offers he could sell to Hollywood. I think for any writer the agent who leads you more to the bank than to the typewriter can be considered dangerous."

Viertel's epigraph comes, he says, from Graham Greene: "The job of the writer is to betray." Perhaps Viertel is the most dangerous friend of all. Born in Dresden in 1920, Viertel went to Hollywood six years later where his father — later the leading character in Christopher Isherwood's "Prater Violet" — was working with F. W. Murnau. His mother, Salka, was a former actress who wrote the scripts for Garbo's films. With the influx of German refugees, Salka Viertel's generosity and her Sunday tea parties became legendary. The young Peter was crazy about sports and wanted only to be a red-blooded American boy.

Peter Viertel with Orson Welles in the 1970s; inset Viertel today.

"The physical aspect of European intellectuals was so totally different from what an American kid wants to be. I knew Bert Brecht was close to being a genius but he was a funny looking man to me."
When Peter's first novel, "The Canyon," was successfully published when he was only 19, everyone thought it had been written by his more intellectual older brother.

Originally, Viertel's manuscript had a long sec-tion about his family and prewar Hollywood and was called "Not Like Now." His editor persuaded him instead to emphasize the more readily marketable 1950s when so much of Hollywood was racketing around Europe, spending blocked dollars and benefiting from a law that exempted those who lived abroad for 17 out of 18 months from

The book opens in 1948 in Sun Valley. Viertel, a recently discharged Marine, and his first wife, Figee, are there so he can work on a govel about his experiences in the OSS. Hemingway introduces himself to Jigee, rubs "lion fat" from Kenya on Peter's sore back, and a long friendship ensues, in Cuba, Paris and Spain.

The Viertels move to Europe for a short screenw-riting job which leads to others. He is constantly blocked on the OSS novel and diverted by skiing in Klosters which he and Shaw turned into what was known in the 1950s as Hollywood on the Rocks. Even when he is absent, Hemingway is writing affectionate and admiring letters, urging Viertel to return to fiction and reluctantly helping him transform "The Old Man and the Sea" and "The Sun Also Rises" into disastrons films. Last month, Viertel sold his letters from Hemingway ("You can write a hell of a book next spring") and Hemingway's annotations on Viertel's "The Sun Also Rises" script ("bad," "inept") at Sotheby's for nearly £40,000 ($76,000). He still has "The Old Man and the Sea" inscribed, "For Pete, No matter how it will turn out, and it will turn out well."

Hemingway even offered to co-write with Viertel a novel about his wartime experiences in Cuba when he patrolled in his fishing boat for German submarines, a generous gesture which Viertel turned down in part because he saw no story there, Hemingway never having confronted a sub.

"He was being Papa, he was trying to save his adopted son," Viertel says. "Now that I'm older I can see wanting to pass something on, it's a con-oction with elernity. It's charitable but always

Insisting that everyone call him Papa gave Hemingway a certain power, Viertel says. "One thing about being a father figure that's attractive is that you call the shots."

With his literary background, war record, charm and unthreatening presence, Viertel was someone older men were happy to have around. In the book he seems somewhat callow and passive — "don't forget, I was among the sharks." he says — and happiest with older people. Even ligee was five years older, and Shaw nine. Everyone indulged him and almost everyone failed him, Huston with his gift for distraction, Hemingway by encouraging him and then telling Domingnin that Viertel had talent but probably would write nothing important. That was shocking and it was shocking that Luis Miguel would repeat it to me," Viertel says. He gets his own back; no man is a hero to his protege. The Hemingway of the book is daft, maundering big-bellied. He smells bad and has an ugly red rash on his face. His wife, Miss Mary, is both malicious and pathetic, as when she dyes her hair red in imitation of Slim Hayward, with whom Papa has flirted by dropping his tronsers before her horrified eyes.

Earlier, Hemingway tries weakly to seduce Jigee in the Paris Ritz, suggesting they have a daughter whom, for their shared love of Viertel, they would Call Petra.

Later, Viertel abandons the pregnant Jigge for Later, Viertel abandons the pregnant Jigge for Aly the French model Bettina, who drops him for Aly Khan "Aly Khan is really one swell gny." Huston tells him in consolation. Viertel has his revenue later at the Huston family Christmas in Ireland. ruined by a donnybrook between Huston and his wile, who has been stepping out with Aly Khan. Comforting Huston who is in bed with a raging black eye, Viertel tells him:

"John, you're not going to like what I'm about to say . . but Aly is really one swell guy." When Jean-Paul Sartre arrives in Ireland to collaborate on "Frend," Huston greets him from a herse in full hunting kit and fails to impress. When he is between mistresses, Huston tells Viertel, he has found it a good idea to bed his secretary "as that ensured a fierce loyalty that he believed was beneficial." Huston is totally generous about Vier-tel's unflattering portrait in "White Hunter, Black Heart" and suggests an even more damaging end-ing but Viertel wonders, as he listens to Huston prepare the script of "Moby Dick" with Ray Brad-bury, whether he hasn't been Starbuck to Huston's Captain Ahab.

The account of the filming of "The Sun Also Rises" in Mexico (entras who looked too Indian were pushed to the back) is a series of comic misadventures, but the best picture is of Europe in the 1950s, devastated still by the war but filled with writers like Viertel dreaming of his OSS oovel and with roaming Hollywood types such as Anatole Litvak, more keen on shopping than on filming. "I like Litvak very much but he was a very difficult chap to be around and the endless shopping for shoes was, I thought, really boring. Shoes and for coats. The worst thing was to get to a country or town that was very mexpensive because then you buy everything, which is what we all did." These days Viertel, 71, lives in Marbella and in Klosters with his second wife, Deborah Kerr, and still plays a mean game of termis and chases the big wave in Biarritz. He is thinking of writing a comic novel about old age: "Getting old, as Marion Davies said, is not for sissies." he says.

He is also working on a play and, of course, on his novel about the OSS; "I think I've finally got it licked."

POSTCARD Digging for Fellini

Michelangelo Aolonicoi shot "L'Avventura," the antique Greco-Roman amphitheater ripples with rainbow fluorescence, special effects offered by ENEL the state electricity works, says a banner on the curtain. Flickering against the night sky, short films by Italy's great masters, Antonioni and Fe-derico Fellini, shed sudden, ghostly light, like remote planets. The program of shorts was screened during the Taorinna Arts Festival, a summer long event that opened with a Antonioni, on the eve of his 80th birthday, was in the theater. On the screen were just eight minutes of his impressions of Sicily — ravishing as a comet — showing smolder-ing volcanos, church bells, almond blossoms and street carnival: five industrial films made for ENEL.

The Fellini program was heftier. It included the witty commercials he did for Barilla and Campari. In an industry that uses film as fodder for TV, then slices it up with commercial breaks, directors suffer, yet virtually all, during the fallow period between films, make commercials to keep going. A great craftsman of media manipulation, Fellini, who has long waged a po-lemic campaign against TV, chose to let these bits and pieces of his work speak for him and the state of the art, as if he were a dead man from an extinct civilization, organizing his own archaeological remains. "I'm not coming to Taormina, not even in a coffin. I'm oot going anywhere," he told organizers. "It would be like accompanying myto." They went ahead without him: Barilla threw a "Pasta Party," Campari passed out samples.

Sometimes you hear mostly Fellini excitedly feeding the actor his lines, speaking in overlap, as when he directs Roberto Benigni in "La Voce della Luna." Original soundtracks reveal actors cutting up: one recited prayers, another Pirandello. and a waiter who could not retain his lines, read a menu instead.

Fellini, once the most interviewed man in Italy, plays cat and mouse with the media and they pay him back. Recent headlines announced that he was on the dole. Sanguineti has published a cata-logue and plans to take his "Felliniani" program to Venice and other international festivals. And of course it will end up where so much of the problem started, on TV.
